"Our struggle is not a choice!" - Insecurities and Protection Strategies of Women Land Right Defenders
A Philippine case study on Leyte and Sicogon Island

Muriel Julia Gahl
Dr. Graham Finlay
Abstract

In the wake of increasing competition over natural resources, the killing of Human Rights Defenders promoting environmental justice or access to land has seen dramatic increase. Women land right activists, protecting their livelihoods and families, are at the forefront of land struggles. However, despite growing recognition of a human right to land and Women Human Rights Defenders as particularly vulnerable group, national and international human rights mechanisms fail to offer effective protection. Why? This thesis tries to find answers, exploring the opinions, perspectives and socio-cultural background of women land right activists in two Philippine peasant communities, claiming their right for land under the agrarian reform. Narratives of peasant women, put a human face on the gender specific risks and challenges they are facing. A focal point is to explore how women land right defenders understand security which indicates the limitations of a human rights approach to address protection needs of women land right defenders. In that respect, alternative safeguard strategies developed by peasant communities themselves, are analyzed and contribute ideas on how effective safeguard strategies for women land right defenders could be conceptualized.
LIST OF CONTENT

Introduction ............................................................................................................................................. 1
1. Problem Diagnosis .................................................................................................................................. 1
2. Goal, Hypothesis, Research Questions .................................................................................................. 3
3. Methodology and Structure .................................................................................................................. 4

PART I: Land Right Defenders as Human Rights Defenders ................................................................. 6
1. Protection under the Human Rights Defenders Framework .............................................................. 6
   1.1. The label Human Rights Defender ............................................................................................... 7
   1.2. Protection Mechanisms relevant to land right activists ................................................................. 10
       1.2.1. National Protection Mechanisms ....................................................................................... 10
       1.2.2. International Protection Mechanisms ............................................................................... 11
       1.2.3. Regional Protection Mechanisms .................................................................................... 12
   1.3. Vulnerability among Human Rights Defenders: Women Human Rights Defenders ................. 13
2. Land Rights and Human Security ......................................................................................................... 15
   2.1. Land Rights in International Human Rights Law ......................................................................... 15
       2.1.1. Women’s right to land ........................................................................................................ 16
       2.1.2. The Human rights impact of land access and land defense .................................................. 16
       2.1.3. The right of peasants ......................................................................................................... 18
   2.2. Human Security ............................................................................................................................ 19
       2.2.1. Land from a human security perspective ............................................................................. 20
       2.2.2. Women Human Rights Defenders and Security ................................................................. 22
3. Conclusion ............................................................................................................................................... 23

PART II: Exploring risks and insecurities of Philippine women land right defenders on Leyte and Sicogon Island ................................................................. 25
   1.1. Promising Social Justice: The Philippine Agrarian Reform .......................................................... 25
   1.2. Peasant movements and land defense ......................................................................................... 27
1.3. Another disaster: Access to land after typhoon Yolanda .................................................. 28

2. Field research: capturing "narrated lives" ............................................................................. 30

3. Research sites ...................................................................................................................... 31
   3.1. Sicogon Island .............................................................................................................. 32
   3.2. Leyte ........................................................................................................................... 34

4. Gender and land control ........................................................................................................ 35
   4.1. A pioneer in gender-equal land ownership? ................................................................. 36
   4.2. Gender relations and land rights activism .................................................................... 40

5. Human Rights Violations against land right defenders ....................................................... 43
   5.1. Physical attacks .......................................................................................................... 44
   5.2. Criminalization .......................................................................................................... 47
   5.3. Intimidation and coercion .......................................................................................... 49

6. Conclusion ............................................................................................................................ 52

PART III: "Who will protect us?" - Exploring Protection Obstacles and Safeguard strategies ......................................................................................................................... 54

1. Protection obstacles .............................................................................................................. 54
   1.1. Local power relations and networks: The Department of Agrarian Reform ............... 54
   1.2. A climate of impunity .................................................................................................. 56
      1.2.1. The Judiciary ....................................................................................................... 56
      1.2.2. Public security forces ......................................................................................... 57

2. The performance of protection mechanisms ....................................................................... 60
   2.1. The Philippine Commission on Human Rights ............................................................ 60
   2.1. International protection mechanisms ........................................................................ 63

3. Gendered perceptions of security ....................................................................................... 66
   3.1. Understanding security in the context of typhoon Yolanda ......................................... 67
   3.2. Gendered insecurities ................................................................................................ 69
      3.2.1. Economic Resources ......................................................................................... 70
      3.2.2. Family ................................................................................................................ 71
      3.2.3. Health ................................................................................................................. 71

4. Protection Strategies ........................................................................................................... 73
4.1. Solidarity ........................................ 74
  4.1.1. Protect each other .................................. 74
  4.1.2. "Sharing is caring" ................................ 76
  4.1.3. Collective action .................................... 78
  4.1.4. Advocacy and protest .............................. 80
4.2. Healing the past ........................................ 82
4.3. Making plans ........................................... 85

5. Conclusion ......................................................................................................................... 87

Synthesis and Outlook ........................................................................................................... 91
Bibliography .......................................................................................................................... 96

ANNEX ................................................................................................................................. I
  Maps of research sites .................................. I
  List of interviews ....................................... III
"Our struggle is not a choice!": insecurities and protection strategies of women land right defenders. A Philippine case study on Leyte and Sicogon island

Gahl, Muriel Julia

https://doi.org/20.500.11825/166

Downloaded from Open Knowledge Repository, Global Campus’ institutional repository