

UNIVERSITY OF TARTU

European Master's Degree in Human Rights and Democratisation

Academic year 2015-2016

INTERVENING THROUGH THE SCREEN

Russian mass media from the perspective of human rights and international law

Author: Alisa Vekeman

Supervisor: Lauri Mälksoo

ABSTRACT

This text adopts an interdisciplinary approach to qualify Russian state controlled mass media as a propaganda tool and to determine the impact on inter-state relations and the rights of individuals. Legal analysis is provided of international and human rights law to uncover available remedies to prevent and address the negative effects. The examples of Ukraine and Estonia are used to demonstrate that establishing the illegality of Russian propaganda depends on the specific contextual situation. It is maintained that states can invoke Russia's responsibility under international law, and should focus on minority integration and enhancing media pluralism. As a last resort, proportional measures to ban harmful broadcasts from their territory can be taken. It is argued that the recipients of propaganda hold a weak position under human rights law. The doctrine concerning extraterritorial human rights obligations does not allow Russian minorities of other states to hold Russia accountable. In addition, unlike hate speech and war propaganda, 'ordinary' propaganda is not illegal under human rights law. This text suggests to consider state propaganda disseminated by mass media a violation of the freedom to hold opinions. A definition of 'state propaganda' is proposed, based on academic writings and existing human rights obligations.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	III
ABSTRACT	IV
TABLE OF CONTENTS	V
ABBREVIATIONS	VII
INTRODUCTION	1
I. RESEARCH QUESTIONS.....	2
II. APPROACH	2
III. PURPOSE	3
CHAPTER I. RUSSIAN MEDIA.....	5
I. MEDIA LANDSCAPE.....	5
II. CONTENT	9
III. DISSEMINATION AND EFFECTS IN OTHER STATES	12
IV. INFORMATION AS A MEANS TO AN END	16
CHAPTER II. PROPAGANDA AND ITS STATUS UNDER INTERNATIONAL AND HUMAN RIGHTS LAW	21
I. QUALIFYING RUSSIAN TELEVISION BROADCASTS AS PROPAGANDA.....	21
II. IMPACT ON INTER-STATE RELATIONS	25
1. Propaganda under international law	25
2. Sovereignty and the principle of non-intervention	28
III. IMPACT ON HUMAN RIGHTS	32
1. Human freedom, freedom of expression, freedom to hold opinions	32
2. Hate speech and propaganda for war	36
CHAPTER III. STATE OBLIGATIONS TO RESPECT, PROTECT AND FULFIL HUMAN RIGHTS	42
I. RUSSIA'S OBLIGATIONS	42
1. The obligation to respect	42

2. The Russian perspective	44
II. MILITANT DEMOCRACY AND POSITIVE OBLIGATIONS OF OTHER STATES	47
1. The restrictive approach	47
A. Legal requirements	48
B. Application in practice	50
C. Criticism.....	52
2. The ‘more speech’ approach	53
3. Minority integration	55
CHAPTER IV. CHALLENGES ARISING UNDER HUMAN RIGHTS LAW	61
I. EXTRATERRITORIALITY	61
II. RIGHTS OF THE AUDIENCE	66
1. Right to receive information without interference	66
2. Right to receive information of a certain kind	67
A. Does such a right exist?	68
B. Who carries the obligation to ensure the right?	70
C. Should the state be under the obligation to guarantee the quality of information provided by mass media?.....	71
III. STATE PROPAGANDA AS A VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS.....	74
CONCLUSION	80
I. THE NEED FOR A HUMAN RIGHTS DEFINITION OF STATE PROPAGANDA.....	81
II. PROPAGANDA AND HUMAN RIGHTS THE RUSSIAN WAY	83
BIBLIOGRAPHY.....	84

2016

Intervening through the screen : Russian mass media from the perspective of human rights and international law

Vekeman, Alisa

<https://doi.org/20.500.11825/237>

Downloaded from Open Knowledge Repository, Global Campus' institutional repository