

Bringing Minority Rights Home

The Effective Protection of Minorities in the Enlarged European Union: Possible Goal or just a Myth?

12.7.2011

European Inter-University Centre for Human Rights and Democratisation

Eliška Pírková

ABSTRACT

This thesis analyses whether the European Union needs to establish a legal framework to protect the rights of national minorities living in its Member States. It focuses mostly on the accession process to the European Union, as minority protection constitutes one of the Copenhagen Political Criteria. This matter is examined through a case studies of Slovakia, Latvia and Turkey, countries with complicated situations of their minority groups. It shows how strong impact, if any the EU conditionality had within the candidate states regarding minority protection. As it is demonstrated, the European Union has not resolved these problems, largely because the European Union lacks consistent and uniform standards on minority protection. It is argued that as the European Union enlarges further, there is a strong need for consistent and uniform standards of internal and external protection of minority rights. In its conclusion the study proposes several possible alternatives that could help the European Union to ensure consistency of standards in the accession process, as well as resolve remaining issues of minorities internally.

CONTENT

- 0 Why Minorities Matter 4

- 1 Eastern European Enlargement 8
 - 1.1 The Legal Framework of the EU Conditionality: Its Scope and Limits 10
 - 1.2 The EU’s Monitoring Function of Conditionality Principles 12
 - 1.3 The Main Paradox of Minority Protection in the EU: Internal v. External Aspects of Minority Rights 15
 - 1.4 The Treaty of Lisbon and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU: A New Hope or Empty Shells? 18
 - 1.5 Concluding Remark: Did Conditionality Really Fail? 20

- 2 Conditionality in Practice: The Case of Slovakia and Latvia 23
 - 2.1 Slovakia 23
 - A: Domestic Background after Gaining Independence 24
 - B: Applying Conditionality in Slovakia 26
 - C: Ethnic Hungarians and their Language Rights 29
 - D: To Conclude 31
 - 2.2 Latvia 31
 - A: Domestic Background after Gaining Independence 32
 - B: Applying Conditionality in Latvia 34
 - C: Russian-Speaking Non-Citizens and their Language Rights 37
 - D: To Conclude 39

- 3 Turkey in Europe? A Challenge for the EU and its Conditionality 41
 - 3.1 ‘Hot and Cold’ Relationships 43
 - 3.2 Application of EU Conditionality in the Context of Minority Protection 52
 - 3.3 The Credibility of the European Union: The EU losing its Face 57
 - 3.4 Concluding Remark 60

- 4 Searching for a Right Direction 62

- BIBLIOGRAPHY 65